If a healthcare facility decides that it wants to consolidate there are many factors to consider.

Combining practices can create a greater revenue-generating entity with potential cost-saving opportunities. The candidates should share the facility's culture and goals. Once a healthcare practice decides on consolidation there are some things that need to be looked into as well as questions that may arise including:

- Perform due diligence on the merging practice's finances, legal standing, and operations.
- What can we expect during the consolidation process?
- Is there support for technology and communications systems?
- Is there an exit strategy?
- Is it a good cultural fit?

Listen in as Jack discussed the seamless transition of IKS into NANI and what practices need to know for consolidation. Listen to the podcast!
